

WATCH TRUST HIT IN KENNEDY SPEECH

Congressman Tells Voters
What He Wanted to Say in House.

RECOUNTS DUEBER CASE

Republican Member Gives Heretical
Views on Tariff Question in Speech at Salem, Ohio.

An interesting section of the tariff debate that has been going spasmodically in the House all session, was transferred out to Salem, Ohio, yesterday, and used to clinch a centennial celebration in that thriving little city. Thereby appends an interesting story.

When Congressman Hainey of Illinois attacked the Watch trust some weeks ago, Mr. Boutelle and other Republicans replied, taking the general ground that in fact there was no Watch trust. Mr. Kennedy is a Republican, and representing a district in which there is a big industry of this kind, he has special opportunities for knowing something about the matter. He insists that there is a Watch trust.

Attacks Trust in Salem Speech.
But Mr. Kennedy didn't get a chance to tell the House what he thought and what he knew about it. There was small disposition on the part of the House managers to give him and floor privileges to a Republican with such heretical ideas. So he didn't get opportunity to speak in the House. Being full of speech, Mr. Kennedy went out to Salem and told his constituents about it. He used the Duerber Watch Case Company, of Canton, in his district, as an example. The Duerber company has been fighting the trust, and has made a telling fight at that.

"A few years ago, in the neighboring city of Canton," said Mr. Kennedy, "was started an industrial enterprise with glowing prospects, the Duerber Watch Case Company. It sailed out upon the sea of industries, to carry honest commerce to every market. Prosperity attended, and its goods were gladly received, until it was ruthlessly attacked by the American Watch Company. Every market was suddenly closed to it. It was scuttled and dismantled, and left helplessly adrift, while master and crew were compelled to walk the plank and in thousands of homes of labor in Canton dwell terror and dismay. As master and crew went down, apparently never to rise again, with a despairing cry and a doleful gurgle, in the sight of this civilization, some lawyers would say of the piratical attack, 'Oh, it is only business competition. But the lawyer with red blood in his veins, whose heart and soul rings true, would deny this. It was not competition. It was an unlawful assault, planned in dark conspiracy by cunning and duplicity, to murder competition.'

Consummate Avarice and Greed.
"The methods of that attack were the most consummate achievement of avarice and greed to conquer a monopoly of domestic commerce, and exploit both the market that purchases and the labor that produces."

"Every true man, who loves an open fight and a fair field, rejoices today that John C. Duerber and his heroic crew did not surrender. They climbed back and repaired the vessel, sought new markets, and struggled on, and when the story of this episode is written, the escape of that industrial craft will be as thrilling as the adventures of any surviving merchantman upon the Spanish main."

BOGUS GERMAN COUNT GETS TWO YEARS IN JAIL

NEW YORK, June 21.—(Roto von Koenitz-Stube, who posed as a German count, has been sentenced to two years at hard labor in State's prison.

The alleged count was convicted of stealing $50 from a Newark boarding house. Detectives found that the "count" had changed into German money bank notes of the denominations of those stolen and was preparing to sail for Europe.

Angry Flames Lick Up Standard Oil Stable

Heroic Work of Firemen Save Big Tanks Containing Thousands of Barrels of Oil and Gasoline, But 17 Horses Perish.

Seventeen horses were cremated and about $7,000 damage was occasioned by fire in the stables of the Standard Oil Company at Half and K streets southeast last night about 10:15 o'clock. Prompt and plucky work on the part of members of the fire department prevented the destructive flames from spreading to two cylindrical tanks containing a total of about 50,000 gallons of gasoline and kerosene, and several hundred barrels filled with oil. The firemen, under Battalion Chiefs Henry and Smith, battled with the flames for two hours and a half before gaining the mastery. Shortly before 1 o'clock they returned to their quarters, but were called out again at 4 o'clock this morning because the flames had broken out afresh in the hay which was left in the early morning fire. Spontaneous combustion is thought to have caused the fire.

The seventeen horses that perished were large, heavy animals valued at $250 each. Twenty tons or more of hay went up in smoke as did a score or more sets of harness.

The flames licked their way through the walls of the stable and were blown over in the direction of the large tanks which were filled to the brims with oil and gasoline.

Wilbur Coleman, son of the watchman who discovered the fire, believing his father was imprisoned in the burning building, attempted to rush in and rescue him, but he was stopped by police and firemen. The young man and his mother created considerable excitement by their wails.

Feared Tanks Would Explode.

Some excitement was caused in the neighborhood of the stables by the report that the flames could not be checked before they reached the tanks. Occupants of the small frame houses nearby hurried up their clothes and pitched furniture out of the windows in the hope of saving these articles if the tanks exploded.

Next Monday evening Guy Standing and the Columbia Theater company will enter upon the ninth week of their successful summer season at the Columbia with a revival of "Pink Dominoes," a bright farce comedy from the French, which was the decided success some years ago when it was originally produced in this country by the celebrated Union Square Theater company, of New York. John Mason, who has been specially engaged by the management, will continue to support Mr. Standing and the Columbia organization, and the original Wyndham edition of the play will be presented. "Pink Dominoes" is the comedy which Sir Charles Wyndham produced in March, 1877, when he took charge of the Criterion Theater in London for his first experience as actor-manager. He himself played the part of the busy cotton merchant from Manchester, and the production had a very successful run. The piece was adapted from the French of "Les Dominoes Roses" and tells of the machinations of two wives who doubt the fidelity of their husbands and determine to put it to the test. They write them anonymous letters making an appointment at a famous bal masque at Cremorne Gardens, where each wife is to meet the other's husband in a pink domino. There is an innocent French maid, who is not so modest as she appears, who resolves to join the fun, and by doing so produces many amusing complications. The sale of seats began at the box office this morning.

GOOD OLD SUMMER ARRIVES AT LAST

Smiling Face of Sun Ushers in Longest Day of the Year.

The summer of 1936 came tripping into life at 4:33 o'clock this morning and for many weeks to come Washington will have a good old warm spell adequately in keeping with its past history. As in spite of the forecast of formalities, the long rainy season, which has prevailed over Washington, lingered until the very last moment, almost threatening to stay through, but the spirit of summer predominated and at the first peep of dawn this morning the rain clouds went scotching away, the bluish breeze blew through and soon afterward a gorgeous sun came stealing up over the hills.

Today is the longest day in the year and, from all indications, it will come pretty near being as hot as any which are to come. The sun rose at 4:32 a. m. and promises to show the light of its face until 7:30. Even then it will be another half hour before dark. According to strict schedule, today will officially be fifteen hours long, lacking three minutes. However a half hour is added on to the morning and another half hour for twilight so that sixteen hours will really be the length of the day.

No matter how many warm days come during the latter part of May and the early part of June one never reconciles one's self to the fact that summer is here until June 21, the longest day in the year. It has come, however, and with it a few statements from the Weather Bureau.

Over there the forecaster says that today will be warm. It is, so much for that part of the forecaster's knowledge of what is. But again he says it will continue to be warm. The rain has gone if not for good, at least for some time and from now on good old Sol will pour his rays down on humanity and send everybody that can go, scattering to seashore and mountain.

Summer amusement places, the various resorts about Washington and the river, will from now on have generous patronage. Even airships would have a good chance these days for not enough wind is to be discerned on the map to prevent a toy balloon from having a good time.

No predictions are yet made as to scorching hot weather, but when the forecaster says it is going to be warm that means that down comforters can be safely put away without any chance of being hauled out "until the leaves begin to fall."

HALF HOLIDAYS IN NAVY YARDS

President Promises to Extend Order to All Government Yards.

President Roosevelt this morning promised a delegation of Congressmen that he would make an effort to extend the Saturday half-holiday to all the navy yards of the country. The concession granted to Washington Navy Yard in this way has caused the demand of their Representatives in Congress that they be given the same. The President said that if there is nothing in the law to prevent, he will issue the order. Congressmen Calder of Brooklyn, Dawson of Iowa, and Roberts of Massachusetts, constituted the delegation that called upon the President. When they left the White House they were in a very hopeful frame of mind.

"If the President can make an Executive order applying to the Washington Navy Yard," said Congressman Roberts, "I do not see why he cannot do the same for the other yards. They are all under the Navy Department, and of course under his jurisdiction as commander-in-chief of the army and navy of the United States."

President Roosevelt told his Congressional callers that if he granted the navy yard employees the half holiday they requested, he would expect them to relinquish their demand for double pay for holiday work whenever they are required to do any in the future. If they present any such demand, he told them very plainly, he would at once withdraw the Saturday half holiday.

Soon after the call of the Congressmen, the President received a visit from a Government Printing Office committee that presented a similar request for week-end half-holidays. The printing office committee was composed of T. C. Parsons, W. P. O'Brien, F. C. Roberts, A. H. Watkins, E. J. Hall, and G. G. Seibold. They were introduced at the White House by Representative William Alden Smith, of Michigan.

The President listened to the arguments presented by the printers and told them that he would investigate the matter, and, if possible, would grant the request.
